

When a decorator appears above a class, the decorator is able to modify the attributes of the class, including the methods and parameters of the class. The decorator can modify variable attributes of the class through changing the init function, as well as through setting new attributes through the setattr() function. The decorator can also add new functions as well as change and remove existing methods through the setattr() and getattr() functions.